PREFACE

A few words in regard to the history, scope, purpose, and arrangement of this Index of Portraits are necessary, in order that the inquirer may use it easily, may understand its limitations, and may not be disappointed by consulting it for facts which it does not pretend to contain.

History. The collection of material was begun by the Publishing Board of the American Library Association in 1897, but the project had already been suggested at the meeting of the Association in 1888, and was at that time referred to Mr R. R. Bowker to be reported on. Mr Bowker presented a tentative report at the St Louis meeting in 1889 (Library Journal, 14:174) in which he called attention to work already done—the separate brief indexes to certain magazines and collections published by the Index Society of Great Britain, the indexes existing in the Harper editorial rooms and in the offices of other publishers, the collection of material by Mr Bunford Samuel of the Philadelphia Library Company, and the smaller but more detailed catalog in the Boston Athenæum. In the discussion which followed the reading of the report the utility of such an index was conceded by all, but it seemed at the time too large an undertaking to be practicable.

In 1896, however, the Publishing Board announced its intention of proceeding immediately with the compilation of an index of portraits, using as a foundation the references collected by Mr Samuel (about 40,000) and those available in the Boston Athenæum, perhaps 10,000 more. In the Library Journal of May, 1897, a preliminary list of books and periodicals to be indexed was printed, the scope and character of the proposed index was outlined, and the cooperation of librarians was invited. The response to the invitation was immediate, and came from all parts of the country. The indexers were provided with special cards properly ruled, so that the details to be recorded might be given on a uniform plan and in such shape that the cards might eventually be sent directly to the printer. In the course of the year it was found to be impracticable to use any portion of Mr Samuel's material, and the Board reluctantly gave up the plan of incorporating his references with those supplied by its other collaborators.*

Within a year 13,000 cards were in hand; in 1899 the number had increased to 30,000, and editorial work on the collection began. Cards steadily accumulated, and still many desirable works were unindexed. A list of some of these unindexed works was printed in the Library Journal, March, 1903, and led to new offers of cooperation. In April and July, 1904, the Bulletin of Bibliography printed a list of the works already indexed, numbering about 1,090 titles, and further suggestions were asked for. In the meantime the indexing of many current periodicals was kept up to date by collaborators or in the office of the Publishing Board.

* A selected portion of Mr Samuel's index was published in the Pennsylvania magazine, 1901, vol. 25, p. 47-70, 228-247, 384-399.

In November, 1904, the Board hoped to be ready to print very soon and were making preparations therefor, when they received an offer from the Librarian of Congress to issue the work as a publication of the Library of Congress. This offer the Board was glad to accept for two reasons: (1) It was thus relieved of further financial responsibility, and could use its resources to support other undertakings which it was eager to carry out; and (2) publication by the Library of Congress seemed to assure a wider distribution of the Index, and a sale at a smaller price than the Board would have been able to set upon it. It was expected that printing would begin in the spring of 1905, but it was not until early in April, 1906, that the cards were actually sent to the printer. Before the end of June the whole was in type.

It is evident from an inspection of the volume that work of this kind, though it may be based upon the contributions of widely scattered collaborators, can only be brought to completion by long-continued labor on the part of a single brain that takes account of endless detail. An immense mass of separate entries has to be alphabetized, digested, and compared, and finally to be worked over into a reasonably consistent whole. This work of investigation and collation has been done by Mr Charles W. Plympton, who for seven years has been almost continuously employed upon it. Under the direction of the editors and with occasional help from other persons temporarily employed he has labored over these 115,000 cards with an industry, a patience, and a freshness of interest beyond all praise. Several hundred volumes he has indexed himself, and for the solution of thousands of knotty questions he has scrupulously collected the necessary facts.

To Miss Browne, the secretary of the Publishing Board, more than to any other one person, the Index owes such completeness as it possesses. She has had immediate charge of the details of the work from the beginning, and has been obliged to give a large share of her time to it. The correspondence with collaborators in the earlier years, the execution of the plans for the development of the work, and the supervision of its daily progress in the later years have been entirely in her hands. She has contributed no small share of the indexing and has herself collated and revised many of the more difficult groups of cards.

My own share has been a less intimate and continuous one, but has extended to the discussion of every detail of form and arrangement, has involved the investigation of many points for which there seemed to be no established precedent, but in regard to which someone is required to make a decision, and has included a careful inspection of the proofs, and the settling of many difficult points which came clearly before us only when the Index took printed form.

Scope. A list of works indexed follows this preface. It includes about 1,181 titles or some 6,216 volumes. In addition to the works listed, many others containing but two, three, or four portraits each have been indexed as they have come to hand, but it has not been thought worth while to swell the List by including volumes of this kind Pains have, however, been taken in these cases to make the title as given in the reference sufficiently explicit so as to leave no doubt in regard to the identity of the book. In other cases a greater degree of abbreviation has been permitted, since the full title could be referred to in this List, but abbreviation has not been carried so far, it is hoped, as to make titles unrecognizable by those fairly familiar with works of this kind.

The selection of books to be indexed is easily open to criticism. In judging this two points should be borne in mind. In the first place, the Index is intended to include such material as will make it useful both in small libraries and in large libraries, and in publishing houses and newspaper offices as well. To be of use in small libraries it must include many popular books and periodicals and well-known collections such as are commonly found in the smaller libraries; and to be useful in large libraries it must give a clue also to the portraits contained in many rare, early, and expensive works which are found only in such libraries. This accounts for the great variety in the character of the books included. In the second place, it must be remembered that the selection is in part an accidental one, being confined to the works which voluntary collaborators offered to index for us, and (in addition to these) to works which were accessible to our one paid assistant in the libraries of Boston and Cambridge. If the work had been done by indexers subject to our direction, who could have been sent from city to city and from one library to another, it would have been possible to draw up a more nearly comprehensive and evenly balanced list.

In general, the principal has been followed of indexing all the portraits in every work indexed. Occasional exceptions to this rule will be found noted in the list. The result is that many persons of minor importance are included, some whose forenames could not be discovered, and some whose portraits have been reproduced because of interest in the artist rather than in the subject. Selection, however, would have been a difficult task—an impossible one on any uniform basis under the conditions of collaboration employed, and it is a clear advantage to the inquirer to know that the ground, so far as it has been covered, has been covered completely.

The Index does not include portraits of an author prefixed to editions of his works except when the volumes have been indexed for the other portraits they contain. Such portraits, it was thought, could usually be found in libraries from the ordinary catalog descriptions of the books.

In general, genealogical works and local histories have not been indexed. Some exceptions in favor of certain notable books have been made, but the works of this class are so numerous, and so many of the portraits included in them are of little known persons, that it was clearly best to omit them. Certain other books contain very large numbers of portraits all of a well-defined and limited class. To include these would have greatly increased the bulk of the Index, and to omit them does not greatly diminish its value. Such are Moses King's "Notable New Yorkers, 1896–99," with its 2,337 portraits, and Ehrlich's "Celebrated pianists of the past and present," containing 114 portraits.

Finally, the Index does not include any references to original portraits as such, to engravings separately published, or to collections of engravings brought together by private collectors. It confines itself to the portraits in books and periodicals and in published collections.

No exact statement can be made of the number of portraits indexed or the number of persons represented. The number of portraits can not be less than 120,000 and the number of persons may be estimated at between thirty-five and forty-five thousand. The indexing of current periodicals is in most cases brought down through 1904 but not further.

Purpose. The Index makes no attempt to estimate or compare the value of portraits, to pronounce upon their authenticity, or to present any further information in regard to them than is plainly given in the book in which they are reproduced. Such information as the book in the hands of the indexer yielded in regard to original artist, engraver, method of reproduction, ownership of the original, etc., is given, and is expressed almost always in the same form as was used in the book. The reader will accordingly notice apparent inconsistencies in the description of the same original and differences in the spelling of the names of the artists. These points of difference he is asked to accept as probably due to the books from which the facts are drawn, and he will not ascribe them too hastily to the carelessness of the compositor or to the stupidity of the indexer or of the editor.

Critical accounts of the portraits of historical personages and of the several reproductions of those portraits are greatly to be desired, but form no part of the object of this book. Such critical accounts, when known to the editors, are mentioned in notes, but in this respect our work is doubtless far from complete. Our main object has been to enable librarians, authors, students, publishers, and editors to turn directly to portraits which would otherwise be found with difficulty or might elude their search altogether.

Arrangement. The editors have been obliged to make a careful study of many intricate questions of alphabetizing, forms of name, entry, etc. Probably no library catalog contains so large a number of troublesome subjects, of royal and noble personages, and of elusive ladies both married and single. The editors have had to depart in several instances from the rules ordinarily followed in cataloging, and it will be well to mention briefly a few of the principal points.

Sovereigns are entered under forenames, in the vernacular form if that is English, French, German, Italian, or Spanish; in the English form in other cases. Under each name the individuals are divided into groups by countries (the countries in alphabetical order). Under each country the sequence is chronological, but kings come first, and are followed by princes of the same name, unless these latter are known by a title, in which case the entry is under the title instead of under the forename. In arranging on this system second names are not taken into account—Marie Antoinette follows Marie Leczynska because her dates are later. Moreover, slight variations in spelling are not regarded; the Maries and the Marias, the Henrys and the Henris, are all brought together and classified by country, irrespective of spelling.

The nobility are usually entered under titles, not under family names, but a general reference from the surname is always made to the title or titles borne by members of the family. Exception to this rule is made in the case of most of the French titles of the Empire, the bearers of which are more commonly known under their family names, and are so entered in this Index as well as in most books of reference.

The distinction between rulers and nobles, while theoretically simple, is often difficult to carry out on practical lines. For the purposes of this Index some easily remembered and applied rule has to be adopted. Rulers bearing the title King or Emperor are accordingly entered under their personal names; but others, called grand duke (granduca, grossherzog), elector (kurfürst), prince (prinz or fürst), count (graf), etc., are entered under the title—i. e. the place with which they are connected. This brings all the German princes, except the royal families of Prussia, Bavaria, Saxony, and Würtemberg, under place names though many of them are or have been rulers in the strict sense of the term rather than nobles. The rulers of the Italian cities, on the other hand, the members of the Medici, Gonzaga, Sforza, Visconti, and other families, will be found under the family surname. The rulers of many oriental nations and places (e. g. Siam and Madagascar) are entered under the name of the place, for the practical reason that oriental personal names are unfamiliar to Western ears and are with difficulty remembered and identified. The archdukes of Austria and Russia are necessarily entered under their personal names, having no family name and no titular designation that can be used as an entry word.

As in the case of forenames, so also in the case of titles, the vernacular form is used in the more familiar languages—Sachsen, not Saxony; Toscana, not Tuscany. Under each title the succession of persons is chronological, not alphabetical. This is particularly appropriate in the case of the English nobility, where a consecutive numbering is commonly adopted, and where the title is borne by only one member of a family at a time; but it works almost equally well in other cases—in the German families, where every member, old and young, has equal right to a title, and among the French Bourbons, where the children have no common claim on the father's title, but each son takes a different title, while the daughters, if they have not won a title by marrying, can only be entered under the family name. In all these cases the successive heads of the family with their respective wives come first, and are followed by the younger members, likewise in chronological order. Under Hessen, for example, are the successive electors and grand dukes, and following them the younger members of the family, who bear the title of prinz.

When the same name is used both as forename, title, and surname, those who bear it as a forename come first, then those who use it as a title, and finally those whose surname it is, the last being arranged in the alphabetical order of their forenames. Persons of the same name are placed as near as may be in chronological order. Artists are entered under their more commonly used appellations—Titian, Tintoretto, Rembrandt, etc.

Women are entered sometimes under their maiden names, sometimes under their married names, and in the latter case they may appear in the alphabetical sequence by their husbands' forenames or by their own forenames. The editors have tried to follow the commoner usage in each case and have been guided, but not controlled, by the form used below the pictures. References from one form to another have been freely made, and the editors hope that ladies will usually be found under the form that seems most familiar. In the case of English baronets and knights and their wives, where it is desired to keep the wife next to her husband in the alphabetical sequence, we have taken the liberty of inserting the husband's name in brackets. For instance, the wife of Sir Thomas Dyke Acland is Lady Acland, not Lady Thomas Dyke Acland, but in order to keep her next her husband we are compelled to print Acland, Lady [Thomas Dyke].

Dates of birth and death, or a descriptive phrase, have been added when it was convenient to do so, but in many cases the editors have not been able to recur to the original work indexed, and have been unable to add to what the original indexer may have given. No extended investigation of the accuracy of dates or other biographical data has been made. One good authority has been accepted, and differences of opinion have not been much regarded. The Index is not a biographical dictionary and should not be expected to take the place of one.

One unavoidable source of apparent error in the page references should be mentioned. It is found that in many cases copies of the same work differ as to the pages opposite which portraits are inserted. This is especially true of many of the older periodicals and of some of the collections. It may often happen, therefore, that a page reference, when followed up, will be found incorrect with respect to the copy in hand, although it may have been made correctly from the copy originally indexed.

A note in regard to the abbreviations used will be found on page lxxv.

The editors desire to record their grateful appreciation of the work done by collaborating indexers in all parts of the country, an assistance without which the Index now published could not have been undertaken. They would also express their thanks to the librarian and trustees of the Boston Athenæum for their permission to incorporate in this work that library's careful index to portraits begun long ago, for access to volumes needed for further indexing, and for the constant use of reference books indispensable for the necessary work of collation and investigation. They are also glad to acknowledge their indebtedness to the staff of the Library of Congress (especially Mr E. L. Burchard, in charge of publications, and Mr H. H. B. Meyer, his successor) for the helpful interest shown in the progress of the work, and the great pains taken to give it satisfactory form.
